
Pentecost Sunday

"I sought my soul, but my soul I could not see. I sought my God, but my God eluded me. I sought my neighbor, and I found all three."

~ William Blake

THERESE AND EVERYDAY MYSTICISM

Everyday mystical experiences are both ordinary in that they happen often in daily life, but extraordinary in that they open out into the experience of divine mercy and love. God is present in these experiences as if slightly under the surface awaiting our notice.

Look at your life this week for this moment of mysticism:

1. An occasion of fulfilling a duty that required complete self-forgetfulness without any affirmation.
2. A comforting or confronting insight into ourselves that reveals a truth that liberates us.
3. A time of silent peace and joy following from a brief prayer.
4. Quiet awe in the beauty and majesty of nature.
5. An experience of profound happiness without any particular thing being the source of that happiness. That is happiness at simply existing and living.
6. A moment of freedom for no apparent reason, from an emotional or physical burden.
7. An encounter with a beloved person who gratuitously embraces and affirms us.
8. An experience of beauty in the presence of music or art.
9. A time of desperate longing that opens out into a mysterious certainty and peace.
10. A moment of participating in awe in the wonder of a child.
11. Or an experience of freely forgiving someone without needing anything in return.
12. An occasion when we were able to remain tranquil and not retaliate in the face of an unjust accusation.
13. An event of meaninglessness, born in patience and suddenly yielding meaning.
14. The spontaneous goodness of a stranger to us in a time of need and our spontaneous recognition of the deep goodness of human nature.
15. A personal sacrifice we made solely because we believed it needed to be done and without concern whether it was even noticed.
16. Being held in existence during a period of personal weakness and desolation.
17. A series of chance happenings leading to physical or emotional healing and well being.
18. The ability to maintain patience and inner freedom in a time of personal diminishing, loneliness and suffering.
19. The capacity to respond to a personal hurt with forgiveness and without violence.
20. Faithful and honest perseverance in a situation in which compromise would lessen personal suffering.
